Gentlemen:

We have in our employ a Syrian who is the owner of several old Arabian Gold Coins. We have been referred to you by The Metropolitan Museum of Art as being an authority in such matters.

Our employee would like to ascertain whether these coins have any value other than of gold. If we sent one of them to you, would you be able to give us this information, and if so, would there be any charge for your services?

Yours very truly,

Dear Sir:

There is very little interest in Arabic coins, either gold or silver, as few people can read them and consequently very few people collect them.

Our organization is one of the few collectors of these coins in this country. Occasionally one that may have historical significance and is properly attributed may have sales value, otherwise they sell as a rule for old gold or a trifle over.

If your Syrian person wishes to send all of them on we can then tell him whether any would have any especial value, and possibly if we might want any of them, we could make an offer. The sending of one on only would only tell part of the story.

Very truly yours,

Curator

Dear Sir:

Acknowledging your letter of the 3rd, we are enclosing five (5) Arabian Gold Coins, and will appreciate very much any information you can give us as to their value, if they have any other than of gold. Many of them seem to be the same, although there are slight differences.

Will you kindly return them by registered mail, insuring them for $50.00, as our employee values them as keep-sakes.

We are enclosing return postage, and thank you sincerely for your interest in the matter.

Yours very truly,

Dear Sir:

Your favor enclosing the five gold coins at hand.

These alā were issued by the Abasie Caliphs and are known as Dinars. I have put down the Mohammedan years in which they were struck. The condition of all of these is very poor and as the whole series looks about alike, there is no interest for these in this country. They can be picked up most of the time for present day gold value or a very little more in this country.

If in fine condition a collector now and then would buy one to show an example of these. Therefore, my advise would be if your man wants to sell, anything he can get for them over gold value would be about as much as he could expect. I am herewith returning them by registered mail.

Very truly yours,
